PARVUS PRESS TO PUBLISH SPECULATIVE FUTURE ANTHOLOGY

Cat Rambo to helm "If This Goes On" – A look at the future of Trump's America

HERNDON, VA. November 2, 2017 — Parvus Press today announced that Cat Rambo will edit the anthology IF THIS GOES ON. The anthology will consist of 30 short stories that look at the state of the world one generation or more from today. By divorcing the people from the policies, IF THIS GOES ON will explore the long-term impact of America's current fractious politics and cultural divides in ways that only speculative fiction writers can.

Said Ms. Rambo, "This anthology is an attempt to rally, to inspire, and to awaken. Some stories may despair, but others will have the light we seek, lamps to light the path and show the pitfalls as we continue forward."

IF THIS GOES ON was conceived by Mr. Colin Coyle, publisher at Parvus Press, as a response to the growing climate of hate and fear in America. "After watching literal Nazis marching through the streets of Charlottesville, and our politicians and media defending them, I knew I had to do something to counter those voices of hate," said Mr. Coyle.

The anthology will contain up to thirty original stories including contributions from Steven Barnes, Andy Duncan, Chris Kluwe, Alexandra Renwick, and E. Lily Yu. Release is planned for 2018 mid-term election season in order to maximize engagement and encourage readers to take the long view when heading to the polls. IF THIS GOES ON is paying contributors $0.08 per word and is currently open to submissions at www.ParvusPress.com/ITGO. Writers of all backgrounds, from across the genre and literary communities, are encouraged to share their visions of the future. We are committed to inclusivity and an anthology that shows the wide range of human experience. Please don't self-reject, but send us your story. As Ms. Rambo says, "This anthology is part of my resistance. I hope it will be part of yours as well."
